Not illustrated. 1870 Excerpt: . compliment; and that Nicholas declared to Senator Douglas that there were only two sensible systems of government in the world--the American and the Russian; that the ovations paid to our iron-clads were highly gratifying; but it would be by no means safer to deduce practical results from all these demonstrations than from the recent Congressional expressions of sympathy with Crete. Since 1848 Congress has not at all been reticent in relation to European affairs when it suited its views, but deeds have never yet followed the words. Still, as long as the power of the United States is not decidedly superior to that of France or England, it is possible that common hatred, common interest, common rivalry, may some day ally them to Russia. But in proportion as America approaches its natural goal, as it preponderates, the eventuality of such an alliance loses all probability....
