Not illustrated. 1873 Excerpt: . . . in front of the slit of one of the spectroscopes before described. This arrangement is one that is in daily use in many of our laboratories, and it must be borne in mind as being the modus operandi by which a great deal of the work has been done to which I shall have to allude shortly. If again we take a tube which contains hydrogen that has been extremely rarefied, and pass a series of electric sparks through it, instead of having the brilliant red colour, we shall have a pale greenish spark, quite different from the former. This great difference is due to the difference in the pressures of the hydrogen of the two cases. , If we then pass on to another substance, and take some lithium instead of sodium, we obtain a brilliant carmine tinted flame, which on examination by the spectroscope, is found to give a spectrum consisting of one splendid red, and a fainter orange line. Potassium gives a violet coloured flame, and yields in the spe troscope a red line and a violet line. If, again, we take a salt of strontium, which was one of the ingredients in red fire, it colours the flame crimson, and by the eye the flame can scarcely be distinguished from the colour of the lithium flame, but in the spectroscope there is no possibility of doubt, the spectrum of strontium, consists of a group of several lines in the red and orange, and a fine line in...
