Indeed, someone has said that the measure of intellectual power is simply the measure of the power of concentration. If manual training possesses such value in the educative process it is the teacher s duty to make use of it whenever and wherever possible. These same exercises express an idea in material form, in other words the pupil makes something. This compels him to first assemble his subconscious, hazy concepts into a clear and definite picture of the thing in mind, --more concentration. He must then organize his work and step by step work out the project. This develops his power of initiative, crystallizes his imagination and compels a logical sequence of thought and procedure. He thinks things through; he...
