Excerpt: .was Virginia, the most prominent name in American history. The first child born in the United States of English parents was named Virginia Dare. In the two charters granted by James I. in 1606 for the colonization of the country from the 34th to the 45th degrees of north latitude, under which the first permanent settlements were made, that of the London Company was designated as the first Virginia colony, and that of the Plymouth Company as the second Virginia colony. The land was taken up in large quantities, and the settlements called plantations were isolated, which, when they became sufficiently populous, were organized into counties--eight of which, the first in the United States--were established in 1634. The settlement of New England--so named in 1614 by John Smith, the father of Virginia--began in 1820, thirteen years later than that of Virginia, proceeded on altogether different lines. The lands were granted in compact quantities to companies who settled together in villages, each one of which had not only its own municipal government--narrow as were the qualifications of citizenship--but its meeting house, school house, fort and military company. The territory comprising the state of Illinois has a peculiar history standing out by itself. The greater portion of it was well known in Europe for more than a hundred years before the struggle for American Independence began, or the political division known as the northwest had an existence. Before the names of Kentucky, Tennessee or Ohio had been...
